Re: Penn Engineering & Manufacturing Corp. v. Peninsula Components, Inc.
Case No. C07 04231 CRB

Dear Ms. Beynon:

This letter responds to your April 22 email about documents and the scheduling of mediation. We completely agree that it is premature to schedule the mediation before you have had a chance to review documents from Pencom. Our concern about setting the schedule for Judge Infante was related to his schedule. His first open date was near the end of June. Earlier dates might be available, but his assistant was not sure when we contacted the office.

Given that timeframe, we think it prudent to put ourselves on the schedule for June 26 with Judge Infante; this is approximately eight weeks away and should leave more than adequate time to receive and review documents from us far before your requested three week deadline.

At the same time, your point about Pencom's production of documents is valid. During our on-site investigation, we were able to locate many responsive documents, which are being prepared to send. Since that time, we have strived to obtain documents from other Pencom sites that are responsive to your requests. Given the comprehensive list of 200 part numbers Pencom has prepared as Exhibit B to the discovery responses, the identification, collection, review, and preparation of these documents is highly time intensive. The final review of the first group of documents should be completed by tomorrow morning, and we expect to ship our first production to you for delivery on Monday. We plan to provide these documents to you at your office in Washington, unless you contact us to send them to a different location.
